OVERVIEW

The passage of the Workforce Investment Act (WIA) in 1998 signaled a new approach to the provision of youth services. WIA asks that youth service providers, accustomed to working in relative isolation, join forces and consolidate resources to better meet the needs of youth and to prepare them for the 21st century.

The following reference, Sources of Funding for Youth Services, has been compiled to provide youth service providers with a comprehensive, up-to-date reference of potential partners and available funding resources that can be tapped to enhance service delivery opportunities for youth.

If you are a newcomer to the field of federal grants, this guide will be an invaluable aid to your grantseeking efforts. For those of you who are veterans, you are likely to find many new and untapped resources to meet your interests.

This reference is divided into thirteen sections: Adult Education & Literacy, Adult Training, Child Care, Community Services, Mentoring and Volunteerism, Health Care, Housing Services, School-to-Work, Staff Development, Student Development, Substance Abuse, Technology, Transportation and Vocational Rehabilitation. Each section outlines grant opportunities, foundations, and web sites for you to access relevant programs and support.

The guide's easy-to-use format presents the essential facts about each program. Each of the individual program descriptions that comprise the thirteen sections contains detailed information in the "Use of Funds" box. It explains the purpose of the program, the eligible applicants, the type of grant, and the amount available by grantor. Also, if you require additional information, the agency and contact person are provided. Finally, the "Value of Funding" offers you a brief statement to determine if the particular funding will help you in reaching your goal. Please note that the funding amounts for listed programs are based on data from the year 2001.

You should be prepared to explore all sections of the guide since many of the grant programs and foundations provided serve more than one function. You are also encouraged to consult the on-line sources for valuable tips on locating useful government publications and web sites.

As you review this manual, remember three things: (1) grants won't fall into your lap, so it is up to you to be aggressive in looking for what is available; (2) partnerships come in many shapes, forms, and sizes, with varying amounts of commitment, a range of sophistication, and a variety of missions, so don't look for an exact fit; and (3) people are more willing to contribute when the objective is to meet a challenge rather than to make up a shortage. This guide provides the reader with national funding information. You are encouraged to use this information to seek out local resources and local program referrals to strengthen community development efforts.

You are also encouraged to “think outside the box” and look at how you currently provide services to youth. Begin thinking of ways to join forces with other youth service providers to become an agent of change and to encourage seamless partnerships that positively impact our youth.

KEY ELEMENTS OF A PROPOSAL

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This is the summary of the proposal. While it is the first page of the document, this section should be written last. It states the need, the objectives, the methods and the outcomes of the proposal. It should include a brief description of the organization, as well as the organization's ability to implement the proposed program. Everything that is important about the program should be stated in this section.

The following elements are usually contained in a proposal summary:

- Identification of the applicant
- Qualifications to carry out the proposed program
- The specific purpose of the grant
- The anticipated end result
- The amount of money requested
- The total project budget

STATEMENT OF NEED

This is the statement of the problem your program is designed to solve. The need should be related to your organization's mission and purpose while focusing on the community or population's need. Accurate facts, statistics or expert testimonies should be used in this section to give validity to the severity of the problem. Describe your constituents in this section and show why their situation warrants attention. If your program is in a suburban town, don't use data about the city next door to argue the need for your program. National statistics can help to place a problem in context, but local data that pertains specifically to the problem you are addressing is best.

GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

The goal states in broad terms what you want your program to accomplish. It incorporates the purpose and the outcomes and is the ultimate result of the change being undertaken. The objectives state in measurable terms the desired outcomes of the project. The objectives should relate directly to the need statement and should be achievable in a specific amount of time. The objectives should not predict unreasonable outcomes because they will be the basis for evaluating the program. You want to be able to meet those objectives in order to have a successful program.

There are two types of objectives:

Process objective – describes the way in which you do something: To recruit 25 social workers to participate in a training on reducing IV drug use among high risk youth.

Outcome objective – describes a change or a result: Fifty high-risk youth will stop using IV drugs and will develop the skills to work in part-time employment.

Although your proposal may have a mix of process and outcome objectives, funders are interested in outcomes and results. Design your program with realistic outcomes that can be the basis for evaluating your progress.

Tips For Writing Good Goals and Objectives:

- Goals and objectives should tie directly into the need statement.
- Include all relevant parties in the target population.
- Allow plenty of time for the objectives to be accomplished; things always take longer than planned.
- Objectives do not describe methods. Opening a new spay/neuter clinic is a method. Reducing pet overpopulation by 10 percent in 1993 is an objective, because it describes a result.
- Determine how you are going to measure the change you are projecting in your objective. If you find that you have no method for measuring change, you probably need to rethink the objective.

PROGRAM DESIGN (METHODS, ACTIVITIES)

This section describes the sequence of activities that the proposed program will undertake to accomplish its objectives. Sequence is important here. Think about the program and describe the activities and tasks in chronological order. It may help to do a timeline for yourself, regardless of whether you include it in the proposal. Everything in this section should relate to your objectives. In addition to describing the activities and tasks, you should justify them and explain why the methods chosen will lead to the results you anticipate. In this section, you may describe the staffing required to implement the program and discuss recruitment and hiring. Describe the qualifications of key personnel currently on the staff who will participate in the program and refer to their resumes (which you may include in the appendix).

Tips For Writing The Methods of the Proposal

- Tie the methods to the objectives and the need statement.
- Ensure that the methods are congruent with the resources requested in the budget.
- Explain the rationale for choosing the methods: cite research findings, expert opinion, and personal past experience with similar programs.
- State what facilities and capital equipment will be available for the project.
- Build various phases of activities on one another to move effort toward the desired results. Include a timeline.
- Be sure to discuss who will be served and how they will be chosen.
- Don't assume the reviewer knows more than he/she does about the project.

EVALUATION

Your evaluation will measure your success at meeting the objectives. You may analyze the results of the project with regard to the process and/or the outcomes. Describe how you will collect data and how you will analyze it. Describe how you will use evaluation results to improve the program in the future.

BUDGET

The budget is a statement of projected expenses. Determine the true cost of operating the program – outline personnel costs, direct expenses, and indirect expenses, such as supervisory staff time. Bear in mind the suggested funding limits imposed by the funder, and create a program with a budget that does not exceed the limits. Don't leave the budget for last – begin thinking about it and costing out some of the expenses while you are creating the program. If administrative overhead or indirect costs are allowed, be sure to include a line item for these costs.

A budget narrative explains the costs you are showing in your budget. This is the place to talk about the cost-effectiveness of your program. If you can determine a cost per participant and can show that it is low, this is a good piece of information to include in your budget narrative.

Types Of Assistance

Grants are categorized into 15 types of assistance. Benefits and services of the programs are provided through seven financial types of assistance and eight non-financial types of assistance.

The following list defines the types of assistance which are available through the programs included in this manual. Please use it as a reference for clarity. However, if you desire more information, please refer to www.cfda.gov.

- (a) Formula Grants - Allocations of money to states or their subdivisions in accordance with a distribution formula prescribed by law or administrative regulation, for activities of a continuing nature not confined to a specific project.
- (b) Project Grants - The funding, for fixed or known periods, of specific projects or the delivery of specific services or products without liability for damages for failure to perform. Project grants include fellowships, scholarships, research grants, training grants, traineeships, experimental and demonstration grants, evaluation grants, planning grants, technical assistance grants, survey grants, construction grants, and unsolicited contractual agreements.
- (c) Direct Payments for Specified Use - Financial assistance from the federal government provided directly to individuals, private firms, and other private institutions to encourage or subsidize a particular activity by conditioning the receipt of the assistance on a particular performance by the recipient. This does not include solicited contracts for the procurement of goods and services for the federal government.
- (d) Direct Payments with Unrestricted Use - Financial assistance from the federal government provided directly to beneficiaries who satisfy Federal eligibility requirements with no restrictions being imposed on the recipient as to how the money is spent. Included are payments under retirement, pension, and compensation programs.
- (e) Direct Loans - Financial assistance provided through the lending of federal monies for a specific period of time, with a reasonable expectation of repayment. Such loans may or may not require the payment of interest.
- (f) Guaranteed/Insured Loans - Programs in which the federal government makes an arrangement to reimburse a lender against part or all of any defaults by those responsible for repayment of loans.

- (g) Insurance - Financial assistance provided to assure reimbursement for losses sustained under specified conditions. Coverage may be provided directly by the federal government or through private carriers and may or may not involve the payment of premiums.
 - (h) Sale, Exchange, or Donation of Property and Goods - Programs which provide for the sale, exchange, or donation of federal property, personal property, commodities, and other goods including land, buildings, equipment, food and drugs. This does not include the loan of, use of, or access to federal facilities or property.
 - (i) Use of Property, Facilities, and Equipment - Programs which provide for the loan of, use of, or access to federal facilities or property wherein the federally owned facilities or property do not remain in the possession of the recipient of the assistance.
 - (j) Provision of Specialized Services - Programs that provide federal personnel to directly perform certain tasks for the benefit of communities or individuals. These services may be performed in conjunction with nonfederal personnel, but they involve more than consultation, advice, or counseling.
 - (k) Advisory Services and Counseling - Programs which provide federal specialists to consult, advise, or counsel communities or individuals which to include conferences, workshops, or personal contacts. This may involve the use of published information, but only in a secondary capacity.
 - (l) Dissemination of Technical Information - Programs which provide for the publication and distribution of information or data of a specialized technical nature frequently through clearinghouses or libraries. This does not include conventional public information services designed for general public consumption.
 - (m) Training - Programs that provide instructional activities conducted directly by a federal agency for individuals not employed by the federal government.
 - (n) Investigation of Complaints - Federal administrative agency activities that are initiated in response to requests, either formal or informal, to examine or investigate claims of violations of federal statutes, policy, or procedure. The origination of such claims must come from outside the federal government.
 - (o) Federal Employment - Programs which reflect the government-wide responsibilities of the Office of Personnel Management in the recruitment and hiring of federal civilian agency personnel.
